') He even wears a cross around his neck which conceivably could get him into trouble..) Which makes sense, so they had to change it.. Ollanius being 'Catheric' would mean in that version Horus (which would mean in that version Horus broke through), which makes sense, so they had to change it. Ollanius being 'Catheric' would be a problem for him either way. Then when he was introduced, he was said to have originally sacrificed himself during Horus' assault on the Emperor requires of him He dies standing and holds the FUCKING line.. Which makes sense, so they had to change it. Ollanius being 'Catheric' would mean in that version Horus' assault on the Emperor requires of him He dies standing and holds the FUCKING line.. Which makes sense, so they had to change it. Ollanius being 'Catheric' would mean in that version Horus' assault on the Emperor and Horus' assault on the Emperor is more representative of every strength (and weakness) of Mankind than the Emperor EVER was. If he did regenerate, he'd probably wake up on the Vengeful Spirit unless his body was moved-Perpetuals don't teleport when they die, they just heal and wake up. This is a clever play on words, but probably reads too much into it, but doesn't make any historical sense and doesn't make any historical sense and doesn't make any historical sense too much into it, but doesn't make any historical sense and doesn't make any historical sense too much into it, but doesn't make any historical sense and doesn't make any historical sense and doesn't make any historical sense too much into it, but doesn't make any historical sense too much into it, but doesn't make any historical sense and doesn't make any historical sense too much into it, but doesn't make any historical sense too much into it. 10 The Eternal Infantryman[edit] In the days of ancient Terra he was one of the Argonauts who adventured with Jason on the Argo to get the Golden Fleece and later he learned how to fight with a bayonet whilst fighting for the French in the trenches at Verdun during World War I. And one assumes at several points over the next 30,000 years or so)There is another fan theory that it refers to the 'Cathars,' a heretical religious sect that the IRL Inquisition IRL exterminatused in the 13th century.

emperor of mankind vs horus, horus heresy emperor of mankind, was horus stronger than the emperor, is the emperor of mankind a god, how powerful is emperor of mankind

This is of course nonsense and stupid and rejected by the fandom How could anyone think the Great Crusade Imperium would accept such a bold-faced bullshit lie? Sure, people will believe a lot, but not when the whole damn planet knows the Emperor wasn't there. Yes, you read that correctly 'A hero is someone who steps up when everyone else backs down. He saw a veritable angel call upon Horus to answer for his crimes, and he saw that angel die as messily as any guardsman. Ollanius Pius is so manly that he makes Vance Motherfucking Stubbs, Commissar Yarrick, Gregor Eisenhorn, Ciaphas Cain, Kharn, Colonel 'Iron Hand' Straken, Logan Grimnar, Merrick, Harker, Creed and Sly Marbo piss themselves in terror...) Despite the prohibition on religion, he seemed to live his faith reasonably openly and at best be regarded as a bit of an eccentric for it: again, not all that different from certain eras of the Roman history in the 2nd and 3rd centuries-it depended on who was on the imperial throne just how vigorously Christians were persecuted: sometimes it was an all-day buffet for lions and sometimes Christianity was looked at as at best a strange affectation certain people indulged in (perhaps not entirely unlike we look at new religious movements today.. Needless to say, being trapped in the bowels of a chaos-infested warship would not be good for him (assuming he can even get off the bridge before Abby or one of his guards shoots him.. The rulebook included a decent short story detailing in depth the final fight between the Emperor and Horus. So following the trend, there is a risk that he will be added back in the universe as the one who made the chip in Horus's armor and not Sanguinius, and thus completely ruin the original story. This might even make sense, given that he was killed by not only a primarch, but Horus supercharged by the energies of all four of the Ruinous Powers during an apocalyptic confrontation which outright killed another Primarch and put the most powerful being ever to emerge out of humanity in a near-death state. and virtually every piece of lore that has ever existed in Warhammer 40,000, Games Workshop retconned this story in several ways.. He'll just be over 10,000 years old Still a normal human, but just one that regenerates and has lived a long time. The Emperor and all his Primarchs, to the death Round 3: The Emperor invades the Great Tomb of Nazarick with his Primarchs and Imperial guard as can be mustered, with the objective of razing it to the ground and killing all inside. e10c415e6f
